HOW TO PICK A SAFE NURSING HOME

---

If you're searching for a nursing home, then you or someone you love likely needs specialized care. Choosing the right facility is a big decision, and you're right to be taking it seriously.

What to Consider When Selecting a Nursing Home

Just like any other important decision in life, choosing a nursing home requires forethought and research. Our free guide covers the many factors you'll need to consider when creating your shortlist of potential candidates. Once you have that field narrowed, you can dig into what each offers and compare that with your requirements.

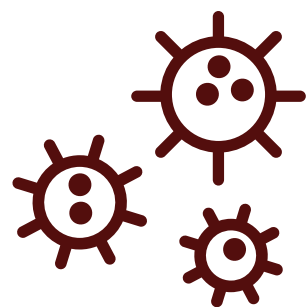

There are qualities you should look for in an ideal nursing home and warning signs that could signal inadequate care. Our guide provides a list of both, so you'll be prepared to recognize a facility that is as safe as possible.

Signs that a Nursing Home Isn't Up to Par

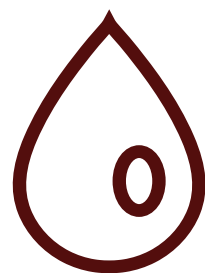

Some nursing homes are staffed by people who aren't good at their jobs. Staff members can not only overlook the needs of their residents, but also abuse or neglect them. Warning signs that a loved has been improperly cared for include:

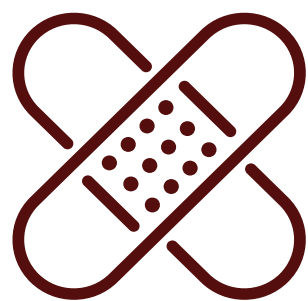

Poor Hygiene

Malnutrition

Dehydration

Bruises, cuts, or fractures

A noticeable fear of staff members or other residents

Drastic changes in mood or personality

What to do when you do notice warning signs

When you notice these signs in your loved one at their nursing home, you should act immediately by contacting a nursing home abuse attorney. Your lawyer will help you plan the next steps to get your loved one proper care and begin the process of seeking compensation for what they've suffered.

The safety of your loved one is obviously your biggest concern. To make sure a nursing home is one you can trust, you'll need to do some research and identify warning signs of a dangerous nursing home. The more thorough you are when making your decision, the better the chance you'll find a facility that is right for you and your loved one.

Unfortunately, some people only realize how poor a nursing home's care is after a loved one suffers an injury. If this sounds familiar and you're considering taking legal action, don't hesitate to contact an attorney immediately.

We hope our tips help you in your decision-making process. If you or your loved one suffers from emotional or physical abuse or neglect in a nursing home, you should know that you have options. Contact the Boston nursing home abuse attorneys at Jason Stone Injury Lawyers today to schedule a free, no obligation, consultation.
